

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

1           Melanoma can be treated in a mammalian subject by administering to the subject
2 an immunologically-effective amount of a xenogeneic melanoma-associated differentiation
3 antigen. For example, genetic immunization with a plasmid containing a sequence encoding 4 human gp75 has been shown to be effective in treatment of dogs with melanoma.